IRELAND

THE LEVIATHAN

Creamy - Lush - Indulgent

The Leviathan of Parsonstown is a historic 72-inch reflecting telescope built in 1845 by William Parsons, the 3rd Earl of Rosse, at Birr Castle in County Offaly, Ireland. Supported by massive stone walls and an innovative system of pulleys, it held the title of the largest telescope in the world for 72 years, until 1917.
The Leviathan is best known for its groundbreaking astronomical observations, particularly Lord Rosse's discovery of the spiral structure of nebulae, including the Whirlpool Galaxy.
These observations fundamentally changed our understanding of the universe and helped lay the foundations for modern astronomy.

BELL'S PULSAR

Fruity - Tart - Elegant

Dame Jocelyn Bell Burnell, born in Lurgan, discovered the first Pulsar when she was a PhD student in 1967. Controversially, Jocelyn was not awarded the Nobel Prize for her discovery because she was a graduate student. Many years later she received the lucrative Special Breakthrough Prize in Fundamental Physics which she donated entirely to fund physics scholarships.

SCORPIUS

Vibrant - Floral - Spiced

Scorpius the Scorpion is one of the 12 signs of the Zodiac. Linked mainly to the myth of Orion the Hunter, Scorpius is said to be a creature sent to kill the boastful Orion by the goddesses Artemis and Leto. While their battle raged, Zeus placed Scorpius and Orion in the night sky at opposing ends so that the two would never meet.

ARGO NAVIS

Rich - Tangy - Refreshing

The Caribbean countries are ideally located to see constellations in both the Northern and Southern Hemispheres. Argo Navis was an extremely large constellation in the Southern Hemisphere that represented the story of Jason and the Argonauts. In 1755 it was divided into three separate constellations, Carina, Puppis and Vela.

SAGITTARIUS

Fruity - Fresh - Vibrant

The constellation of Sagittarius is often linked to the centaur Chiron. There are two centaurs in the night sky, Sagittarius and Centaurus, and an old tradition states Chiron devised the constellations Sagittarius and Centaurus to help guide the Argonauts in their quest for the Golden Fleece.

ANDROMEDA

Creamy - Aromatic – Opulent

The beautiful princess of legend, Andromeda was the daughter of the Queen Cassiopeia. After incurring the wrath of the gods, Cassiopeia tied Andromeda to a rock as a sacrifice to the sea monster Cetus. Andromeda was saved by Perseus. All four of these constellations can be seen in the autumn.

ASTRONOMER'S BREW

Bold - Rich - Aromatic

When observing late at night, astronomers' preferred tipple was a wee brandy! It would have helped to keep them warm during cold observing nights. In the Georgian and Victorian eras this would have been very common amongst astronomers. In modern times, we're sure they've expanded their tastes.

the MERIDIAN

A POINT IN TIME.

Long before the world agreed on a single line of reference, Armagh had already drawn its own.

The Meridian takes its name from the historic Armagh Meridian, a line used by astronomers at Armagh Observatory to measure time, map the skies and explore the world beyond.

Here, that same spirit lives on and discovery takes a different form, extending beyond our name and into every drink we serve.

6 REGIONS. 15 COCKTAILS.

Our menu is inspired by six regions of the world, each represented by two signature cocktails that capture the flavours, ingredients and traditions of their destination. Completing the journey is International Waters, a collection of three thoughtfully crafted non-alcoholic cocktails that showcase some of the world's most exciting flavours and ingredients.

Designed in collaboration with world-class mixologists, every cocktail combines global inspiration with exceptional craft, using premium spirits throughout, while our syrups, infusions and signature ingredients are prepared by hand in-house.

Just as the Armagh Meridian once connected people to the world around them, we invite you to explore it through a curated collection of cocktails and spirits designed to transport you somewhere new, one sip at a time.
